America's Highway: Route 40
If you lived anywhere near it, you have memories of Route 40. Makes it seem like Route 40 has been here forever, but it hasn't. It was neither the first nor the last east-west “highway” running through northern Delaware and Maryland. The early 18th century boasts a well-worn Indian trail that was replaced by the National/Cumberland Road, and other smaller projects, some of which were unique to our area, all of which had their own roadside establishments. Using lecture and on-line video clips, this course will review the various roads that traversed northern Delaware to western Maryland and eventually to Illinois. Note: No senior tuition waiver. ### Trouble on Route 40
This program puts the spotlight on Route 40 during the Cold War when it was at the forefront of international tensions in the early 1960s. On the busy highway between Baltimore and the Delaware Memorial Bridge, Jim Crow, African Decolonization, the Soviet Union, Cuba, and the Kennedy Administrations collided as diplomats from newly decolonized African countries shuttled back and forth between the United Nations and Washington, D.C. As the global situation deteriorated, African envoys were humiliated by Jim Crow when establishments refused to serve them. The Soviet Union leveraged this to strengthen their relationships as President Kennedy put pressure on Delaware and Maryland truck stops, restaurants, gas stations, and motels to serve them. To unpack the story of a collision on 40 we look at the history of this historic old road, international affairs, and the Civil Rights Movement as Freedom Riders started rolling up and down the road. ### Cecil County in the Civil War
In the decades prior to the Civil War, slavery steadily declined in Cecil County and yet it was dangerous to openly support abolition. How did a county on the Mason-Dixon Line in a slave-holding border state react to the political tensions that turned deadly and threatened to split the country? This question will be investigated along with an examination of events in Cecil County during the war, and a look at the contributions of its citizens to both sides in the struggle. The class will also examine how the county changed after the war ended. Note: To enhance course material presented in the classroom a field trip may be included.
